

I find Satellite radio to be a wonderful addition solution to my long distance and cross county driving. Finally I have access to decent, high quality music, news, sports, etc. I am especially happy with the recent addition of local weather and traffic reports.

Why would anyone consider forcing satellite radio to abandon this line of programming. If this happens, then the next thing will be satellite radio itself. This is definately a creature of the marketplace. If the public is willing to pay for access, how is it any different than cable TV or satellite TV?

Don't mess with the success.
